All great thinkers live and move on a high plane of thought. It is only there they can breathe freely. It is only in contact with spirits like themselves they can live harmoniously and attain that serenity which comes from ideal companionship. The studies of all great thinkers must range along the highest altitudes of human thought. You will notice that your first sensation after reading a great book is one of melancholy and dissatisfaction. Such discontent results from the magnificent ideals that have ever haunted the human mind and given us our highest proofs of a future immortality by reason of the impossibility of their fulfillment. The great ideas and sentiments are so far beyond those of ordinary working life that you cannot turn a side from one to the other without any acute sensation and consciousness of the contrast. A habitual meditation on the vast problems that underline human life - thoughts of immortality, of the littleness of mere man, of the greatness of man's soul, of the splendors of universe - these things do not fit men to understand the average human being. It is easy to understand, therefore, why such thinkers fly to the solitude of their own thoughts.
