Q.4	During summer vacation, a freelancing journalist in aesthetics visits	14

the Fundacio Miró in Barcelona. It is a very relaxed gallery, with no major security presence and none of the ugly signs that pollute the gallery with warning of criminal charges to be levied at anyone who breaks the rules. On seeing one of the paintings, the journalist realizes that it could form the basis of an article. She quickly takes a photograph of the painting. No one seems to mind. Later she finds an internet cafe, and logs into her module web page. She uploads the photo of the artwork, and adds it to the resources page for the article in which she plans to discuss the artwork. The page has its security permissions set so that only Journal staff and members can access it. The image will only be used in discussion of the aesthetics.

- i. Has the journalist done anything wrong?
- ii. Is the image subjects to copyright?
