(1 x 10 = 10)IV. Comprehension: Read the passage carefully and answer briefly.

Self confidence allows a child to respect himself or herself and other and learn the responsibilities that comes with it. Norms and limits are important to facilitate this process.

Norms and limits teach children mutual respect and responsibility of their actions, responsibility towards themselves and responsibility towards ensuring others rights. This learning starts from childhood. The process by which individuals learn the culture of their society is known as Socialization. Culture consists of value, attitudes, norms, ideas internalized habits etc. Culture is learned and internalized. Value is a belief that something is good and desirable. Families are the first and foremost agents in creating the values and attitudes.

Answer all the questions:

(5 x 2 = 10)

1. What allows a child to respect himself and others?
2. What do norms and limits teach a child?
3. What is Socialization?
4. What does culture consist of?
5. What is value? Where does a child learn values?

V. Precise writing:

(1 x 10 = 10)

Write one - third of the following passage.

Discipline is the law of nature and it should be the law of life. Day and night alternate each other regularly and the seasons come and go in their proper order. The importance of discipline in human life cannot be over-estimated. In military, discipline is of utmost importance. An undisciplined army is bound to get defeated even when it is equipped with superior weapons. An office-goer who is not disciplined is likely to lose his job sooner or later. A student who is not disciplined can achieve nothing in life. He is destined to fail in every examination. A farmer who cannot sow seeds at proper time cannot get any crops. The crops are sure to grow dry and wither away if they are not watered regularly. In the life of a nation, only discipline can ensure progress. Democracy can be strong, successful and lasting only if the people of the country concerned are disciplined.
