Respiratory diseases like bronchial asthma, bronchitis and recurrent sore throat are on the increase due to the rising pollution of air caused by increase in automobiles and industries. Asthma which is a serious health hazard and so far is considered incurable can be now effectively cured by combining acupuncture, acupressure and yoga.

Asthma is accompanied by attacks of breathlessness, associated with cough and wheezing of the chest and sometimes it may be so acute as to be life-threatening. Asthma is caused mostly due to an allergy to dust, pollen from flowers or certain foodstuffs. In many cases it runs in the family and may be seen right from the childhood. During change of seasons (near Holi and Diwali) the asthma attacks get precipitated, perhaps due to the high allergic factors in the air.

Acupuncture and acupressure both work by regulating the negative and positive energy flow in the body and thereby pre-establishing their equilibrium.

6. Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow :

All human beings want to be successful but 90% cannot. Why does this happen? What are the factors responsible for these failures? And like every other person, do you also blame others for your incapability? The fact is that you are responsible for your failures. To escape this, one unnecessarily blames one's luck, people and circumstances. Here are three keys to success.

The first one is patience. "Those who are impatient are the most unsuccessful people," says John Ruskin. Our daily routines test our patience, which in turn leads to depression. This upsets our relationships and we think we are facing obstructions and restrictions. If you can remain patient just for 20–30 minutes, you'll be successful. Again, self-confidence is one of the most important secrets of success. Due to unfavourable circumstances, commands and responses, we lose confidence and become victim of depression and tension. Self-confidence can help us overcome all obstacles.

It often happens that we don't take initiative. We either depend on others or leave to destiny. But if we make an effort, we can succeed in completing majority of the tasks. What others can do in 10 years, we can do in six and that is no mean achievement.

(a) What two essential qualities should people have to become successful in life? 2

(b) What two factors are normally held responsible for failure? 2

(c) What two problems do people experience in case of their failure? 2

(d) Which two words/expressions used in the passage mean similar to the following? 1+1=2

At a time when the use of fossil fuels to power vehicles is making environmentalists angry, an alternative source of fuel—the biodiesel—emerged as a useful solution. Additionally, its use solves a disposal problem.

The fuel is nothing but used vegetable oil which has been tested satisfactorily. It has made a vehicle called the Veggie Van (a motor home) runs more than 16000 km across the US. Also it has visited 20 major cities causing absolutely no harm to the environment. Vegetable oil from various restaurants in America was all that was used along the entire journey. The novel experiment was started as a college project by two students—Joshna and Kam. It eventually ended in a massive public awareness programme. The idea of using vegetable oil as fuel for a diesel engine first occurred to them when they visited a traditional farm in the picturesque Southern Germany where vehicles fuelled by vegetable oil were in use. While studying agriculture and living on these farms, they noticed that the farmers were always filling tanks of a yellow liquid. “This fuel comes from the canola plants which grow on our farms and nearby areas. We put in the diesel and it smells good,” farmers said.

8. Make a summary of the following passage in about 100 words : 5

Today, English has a total vocabulary of two million words followed by German as a pathetic second with 186000 words, Russian with 136000 words and French with 126000 words.

The vastness of vocabulary and the ability to see the relationship between words is one of the major factors in measuring genius. Shakespeare excelled any other human being in this aspect. His encyclopaedic knowledge of science, history and mathematics, classical literature, sociology, psychology, law, Latin, French, politics, music and art acquired by studying books relating to almost every mental discipline and observing the habits and style of life of various sections of people all around him enabled him to draw ideas generally from all those sources for being used in his plays.

Then what justification is there for any voter, whatever his profession, to place this extraordinary man to the position of a runner-up in ranking of the greatest Briton ever. It is ironical that the voters who took part in the BBC poll have placed him far below Newton.

The dog is almost a saint. He cannot speak, hence, he can never tell a lie. A dog willingly accepts his master's superiority and subjects himself to his authority. But we shouldn't be deceived by this act of a dog. He does not consider himself to be a slave. He expects his master to be fair and just and he expects to be loved and respected. He looks upon his master as his lord, but he wishes to maintain his dignity.

A dog can be taught to do almost anything with friendly encouragement, patience and a biscuit. Corporal punishment inflicted upon an intelligent dog is unacceptable. The dog can read his master's thoughts, can understand his vacillating nature, and many a times even foretell his decisions. He knows when he is unwanted and he keeps out of his master's way. When his lord is anguished, he knows it is time to comfort him. He creeps up to him quietly, lays his head on his lap and seems to be telling his master, "Let others be, let them abandon you. I am here by your side, let's take a walk together."
